Prices in the stock market to-day sagged slowly but steadily, exhibiting little rallying power until the last hour of the business session. In the final hour, for the first time during the day, a tendency toward recovery was manifested; but this was of brief duration and quotations again fell back, closing but little above their lowest figures and at average losses in the prominent stocks of between one and two points.

The volume of trading was considerably diminished. The market appeared to develop its primary impetus downward in the lower range of prices for our stocks in the London market made before business opened here and by selling here during the day for London account of a quantity of stock estimated at between 20,000 and 30,000 shares.

THE OUTSIDE MARKET.

With the exception of the mining group of stocks, outside securities to-day were dull to the point of stagnation. The undertone was one of depression, and the market end of the session did not usually exceed fractional limits, and a few of these consisted of the mining group, which was depressed upon the Green issue, which constituted about the only noteworthy feature of the market.
